THE SOCIALISM OF THE TRUSTS. (New York Journal and Advertiser.)

(New York Journal and Advertiser.)

The American Republic was built upon the foundation of individual enterprise. This old economic order, which has produced what we know as the American character, with all its vigor, audacity and self-reliance, is threatened from two sides. The avowed Socialists would take all business out of the hands of private citizens and intrust it to public officials. The trusts would take it out of the hands of ordinary men and give it to a few monopolists.

In so far as the conduct of the race polists.

In so far as the conduct of the national industries is concerned, there is no difference between State socialism and trust socialism. Both abolish individual enterprise in business. Both and trust socialism. Both abolish individual enterprise in business. Both reduce the population to the position of employees. But there is a great difference in the distribution of the product, and in the effects on national happiness and character. State socialism gives everything produced to the workers. Trust socialism gives the workers the lowest wages for which they can be induced to labor and turns over everything else to a handful of capitalists, Under State socialism the employee is a self-respecting public official who works for no man, but for the whole community, of which he is a citizen equally with his superior officer. Under trust socialism the employee is a servant. He is working for men who stand on an entirely different level from his own. There is no possibility of winning promotion that shall put him on their grade.

By all its traditions the Democratic party is pledged to the maintenance of the American system of individual enterprise as far as possible. The ideal of its founders was a state of society in which every man should be his own master. But due regard must be paid to the course of social development.
The tendency toward the concentration of industries in many directions cannot be and ought not to be resisted.
Where an industry has passed beyond the stage in which competitive, go-asyou-please management can secure the best results for the public, it ought to the stage in which competitive, go-asyou-please management can secure the best results for the public, it ought to be organized under a single control.

But in that case, as a rule, that control should be directed by public authority.
In other words, where the progress of events has made an infusion of socialism unavoidable, the Democracy prefers State socialism to trust socialism.
That is the case, for instance, in the matter of the telegraphs. The telegraph business is organized on a thoroughly socialistic basis. A single vast system extends its wires from Key West to Puget Sound. Competition is practically non-existent and individual enterprise entirely so. In such cirenterprise entirely so. In such cir-cumstances private control is wholly nationalization ought to be made complete.

So of the railroads. We have not yet reached the single Railroad Trust that is to control all the transportation routes of the country, but things are moving that way so rapidly that the end is plainly in sight. Afready we have single men in command of Failroad systems greater than the whole mileage of important European countries. Haif a dozen men could get together about a lunch table and dictate the policy of all the roads, in the United States.

The railroads of this country employ a million men—one-fifteenth of all the voters of the Union—representing a population nearly equal to that of the State of New York. These men constitute a force too formidable to be under any control but that of the nation. We talk about the devices in other directions.

State of New York. These men constitute a force too formidable to be under any control but that of the nation. We talk about the danger of militarism, from a standing army of a hundred thousand men, but here is a standing army of a million men—the picked men of the country for vigor, courage and endurance. By the side of such forces how petty were the little bands of men-at-arms with which the Colonna and the Orsini terrorized Rome in the Middle Ages!

The railroads not only control the largest organized force of workers in the United States, but they control practically all the industries in the country. By their alliance with the trusts they are helping to kill off competition everywhere. They built up the Standard Oil Combination by discriminating rates and persecution of rivals until now the creature is greater than its creator. They have maintained the monopoly of the Sugar Trust. They uniformly use their power to build up great combinations and destroy individual enterprise.

The railroad system has passed beyond the competitive stage of organization, and therefore it ought to belong to the public. Under national control, with discriminations abolished and a fair field opened to all, it would help to delay the advance of socialism in other directions.

Meanwhile it should not be forgotten that the part wasty at the control to the first the poly wasty at the control to the first the poly wasty at the control to the first the poly wasty at the control to the first the poly wasty at the control to the first the poly wasty at the control to the first the poly wasty at t HEAVY PENALTY REMITTED.

Through an inadvertence the British steamer Falls of Keitle, Captain W. S. Ralph, incurred a penalty of $5,000. The quarantine laws require that the bill of health of a ship coming to our ports from a foreign port must be made out at the port of departure by the American consul or by a medical officer designated for the purpose. When Captain Ralph sailed from Fort Elizabeth, South Africa, he falled to attend to this or left it to the agent of the line, who neglected it. Upon arrival at Newport News a few days ago a fine of $5,000 was noted against the ship by the customs collector. It was taken up to the Treasury Department, and as there was no evidence of intention to ignore the law the minimum fine of $15 was imposed, and the ship cleared for Norfolk.
